5G TOWERS IN UK ATTACKED

5G Towers In UK Attacked Because Of Conspiracy Theories

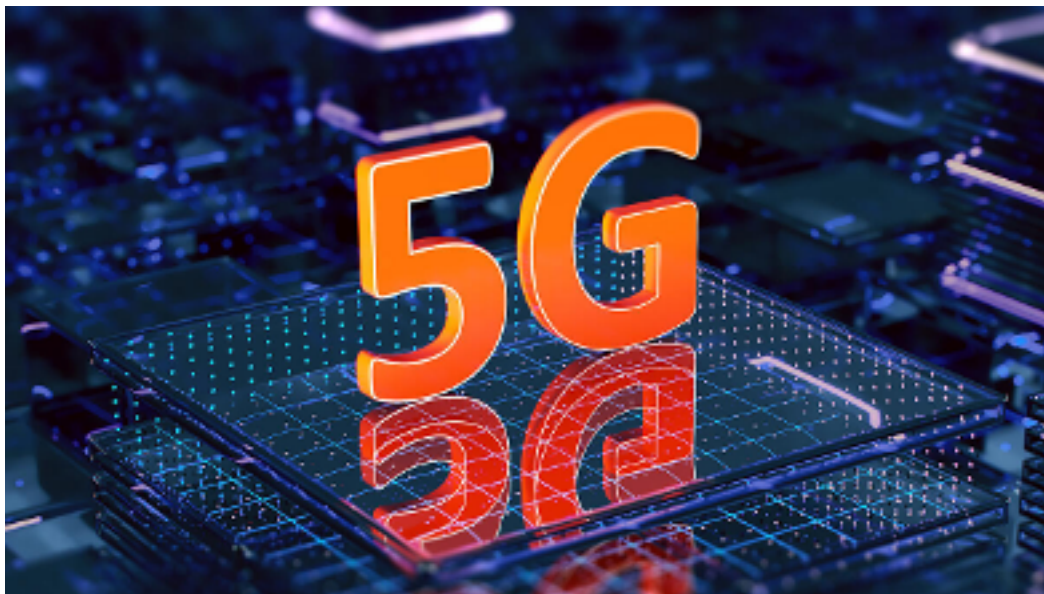

A conspiracy theory is going around. This theory states that 5G towers spread COVID-19.

5G is the next generation of cellular networks, It will run much faster than the current 4G, which will be very good and resourceful!

The attacks on towers in the UK happened in Liverpool, Birmingham, and Belfast. They were set on fire.

There is no actual health risks for 5G, but WHO said that it is "possibly carcinogenic", like red meat and hot coffee. This does not mean you will get cancer.

THE IN-GAME PANDEMIC

Researchers can study the way people behave because of a code bug

The Horde in World Of Warcraft: Battle For Azeroth

In 2005, a game called World Of Warcraft (WOW) experienced a pandemic. This pandemic is called Corrupted Blood, and was released by accident.

There is a raid in WOW in which the final boss, Hakkar the Soulflayer, hangs a DoT (Damage over Time) effect on players, which spreads if they get close, like a real virus! This effect is supposed to end after the bossfight. But, it did not. In WOW, there is a class called a Hunter. Hunters can use animals to help them, and when the animal is de-summoned, the effects on the pet are paused. As a result, a hunter dismissed his pet during the fight, then summoned it out of the raid. The pet was affected by Corrupted Blood, which the player spread to other players, causing a death loop for low-level players.

This spread fast since in WOW cities, there are usually a lot of players, which resulted in the DoT becoming never-stopping. The end result was that Blizzard, the company that made WOW, had to reboot all the servers, killing the virus.

Researchers believe that if the players were acting like themselves in real life (WOW is a MMORPG), they can study their behavior and use that knowledge to help stop the spread.

We recommend you download World Of Warcraft, and the server we recommend is an American server. See you in Azeroth!
